

M BDS presents an exclusive five-book series by Dr. Myint Htwe, former health minister of Myanmar. Drawing from his extensive experience acquired while working at the WHO-SEARO and in dealing with issues in resource-limited developing countries, Dr. Htwe provides a practical roadmap for navigating the most pressing public health challenges faced in resource-limited countries.

This series offers more than just theory. It provides tangible insights and creative solutions for real-world issues. From understanding the complexities of health systems to tackling the challenges of healthcare delivery, these books cover crucial topics like: (i) Health System Challenges: Get a deep dive into the constraints and obstacles faced by developing nations. (ii) Effective Solutions: Discover actionable strategies to improve healthcare delivery. (iii) Cross-Cutting Issues: Learn to address complex problems in resource-limited environments. (iv) Strategic Thinking: Gain insights into neglected technical areas and innovative solutions. These books are designed to be a catalyst for change, empowering you to make logical and strategic decisions that could strengthen public health systems as a whole. Whether you are a student, a researcher, or a seasoned professional, this series will equip you with the knowledge and creative ideas needed to build a solid, adaptable, and responsive healthcare system. The articles in those books can also be used as reading materials for discussions or debates in MPH courses at school of public health, helping to strengthen the critical thinking and epidemiological reasoning skills of future public health professionals.

Call to Action: Download this essential series today and become a force for positive change in global health.

"Public health is an art, an ideology.
The art needs to be developed steadily, systematically, and flexibly.
There is no moment when in public health. We have to work as a team.
Let us work together to improve the performance of healthcare delivery systems."
